

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 2010

DAILY GLOBE

IRONWOOD, MICHIGAN — VOLUME 91, EDITION 29

Margaret Levra/Daily Globe

Nick Keller of Richmond, Minn., proudly watches Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources Conservation Warden John Windt, right, officially check the odometer to verify that Keller broke the "longest snowmobile journey" world record on Wednesday. Keller crossed the 12,789-mile mark near Hiawatha in Ironwood. Keller's great-nephew, Jonathan Kaelke, of New London, Minn., sitting on the sled, rode the last mile and one-half with Keller.

A world-record journey

Minnesota man breaks snowmobile record in Ironwood

By MARGARET LEVRA
Globe Staff Writer

IRONWOOD — Nick Keller, of Richmond, Minn., accomplished his goal of breaking the world record for the longest snowmobile journey in 60 days Wednesday morning when he clocked 12,789 miles in Ironwood.

It only took Keller 40 days to break the record.

Keller isn't stopping at 12,789 miles.

"I've got 20 more days to ride," he said Wednesday, as he set out to expand on his mileage record.

Keller has until Feb. 23 to complete his 60 days of riding the trails on the Gogebic Range and in Iron County, Wis.

(See SNOWMOBILE — Page 3)